The sea appeared to break and completely smother the boat; and some seconds she would entirely disappear, when the cry would arise that she was lost; she would then appear again almost perpendicular. After remaining some time in this perilous position, she drew off from the wreck, and we saw that she had lost several of her oars, and, at the same time, we thought some of her men. Joining the whale-boat, both returned to the Lady Bird. What the feelings of those on the wreck must have been we can only conjecture; on shore we thought their last chance was gone, for few of us thought they would hold out another night, or that...
