The evidences of growth are largely absent. Area Of Cultivated Land. One can travel, or could last summer, over every mile of operated railway in the state, a distance of over one thousand miles, without seeing a field of wheat. The census report of 1890 says that this county, with its million dollar investment in irrigation works, managed to grow thirty-nine acres of wheat. Albany county grew six acres and Carbon county fifty-six acres. The three most populous counties combined grew one hundred and one acres. In all this great State with its sixty-three million acres of land only 19,000 acres were cultivated, about one percent of the land under ditches. In the light of facts like these it is not surprising that our agricultural standing is low; that our modest exhibit at Chicago subjected us to the charge of having had to go out of the State to procure it. One could not remain in that exhibit a day without hearing expressions of surprise and amazed conjecture as to whereabouts in the State it was produced. I speak of this because of the contrast to the reception accorded the exhibits of adjoining States. While Colorado's magnificent display of farm products was a constant subject and commendation it occasioned no surprise because it was in accord with popular anticipation, and the same was true of the superb collection of cereals from Montana, but when the report went around that Wyoming wheat had...
