Harry Vardon was one of the first superstars of modern golf. Vardon won 7 major championships, including six Open Championships and one U. S. Open. Overall, Vardon won 62 tournaments during his career, including a record 14 in a row, still unmatched to this day. By his early 20s, Harry developed a demanding practice regimen, the most ambitious of the time period. Harry was the first professional golfer to play in knickerbockers discarding the proper dress of an Englishman in an uncomfortable shirt and tie with a buttoned jacket. Vardon popularized the grip that bears his name, one still used by over 90 percent of all golfers. He became golf's first international celebrity in 1900 when he toured the United States, playing in more than 80 matches and capping it off with a victory in the U. S. Open. He was the runner-up at his next U. S. Open in 1913, an event portrayed in the film The Greatest Game Ever Played. At the age of 50, Vardon was again the runner-up in his third and final U. S. Open appearance, in 1920. In his later years, he became a golf course architect. Vardon died in 1937. That year, the PGA of America created the Vardon Trophy, awarded annually to the player on the PGA Tour with the years lowest adjusted scoring average. In 1974, Vardon was chosen as one of a select group of inductees into the World Golf Hall of Fame. In 2000, Vardon was ranked as the 13th best golfer of all time by Golf Digest magazine. To sum it up, Vardon is one of the greats of the game. His contributions and love for...
