The zouaves have been for some time recruited among Frenchmen instead of among natives, as formerly. They are recruited usually in cities and generally, it is said, from base elements. They are said to have a bad reputation. They wear a moorish dress. The blue blouse and vest are ornamented with red pipings. The wide trousers are pleated round the girdle and arc; tucked into high white or gray-blue gaiters. The cap, called chechia, is of red woolen stuff. A white turban is wound around it for full dress. Up to 1870 the the color of this turban was green. The officers wear wide blouses with...
